NU Looks For Second Straight Big 8 Win Today Against Oklahoma State

Tom Osborne's Nebraska Cornhuskers will be looking for their second consecutive Big 8 victory this afternoon as the Huskers host Jimmy Johnson's Cowboys from Oklahoma State University.

Nebraska, 4-1 overall and 1-0 in the Big 8 and ranked No. 9 this week by United Press International, defeated Kansas 54-0 last Saturday at Lawrence. Oklahoma State is 0-4 overall and 0-1 in the league, losing last week to Missouri, 30-7, at Stillwater.

Against Kansas, the Huskers rolled up 35 first downs—tying a school record—and 520 total yards, while holding the Jayhawks to just 14 first downs and 212 offensive yards. It was the Blackshirts second shutout of the season. Iowa was the first, 57-0.

Nebraska's Offensive Player of the Game against the 'Hawks was senior quarterback Jeff Quinn, from Ord. He completed 10 of 14 passes for 124 yards, including two touchdown strikes to senior split end John Noonan, of 31 and eight yards. Quinn also rushed for 36 yards on five carries. Other fine offensive performances were turned in by—senior I-Back Craig Johnson, 17 carries for 109 yards and two touchdowns; sophomore I-Back Roger Craig, 85 yards on 20 carries and three scores; senior fullback Andra Franklin, 11 carries for 63 yards and one TD.

The Huskers' Defensive Player of the Game against KU was sophomore linebacker Steve Damkroger, from Lincoln. In an alternate role, he had 11 tackles, including 10 unassisted, one stop behind the line for a nine yard loss and one pass broken up. Junior tackle Henry Waechter also had a fine effort against the Jayhawks, getting seven tackles, including six unassisted, and two stops behind the line for a loss of 10 yards.

Pacing Oklahoma State today will be senior running backs, Ed Smith and Worley Taylor. For the season, Smith has 50 carries for 173 yards and two scores, while Taylor has 47 carries for 160 yards.

Defensively, the 'Pokes have been led by senior defensive tackle Curtis Boone, junior linebacker Ricky Young and senior defensive back Gregory Johnson.

Going into today's game, Osborne, in his eighth season at NU, is 69-19-2, for a winning percentage of .778. He is the fifth winningest active coach in the country.

Johnson is in his second season at the OSU helm, with a school and career mark of 7-8. Last season during his rookie year in the Big 8, Johnson led the Cowboys to a 7-4 mark and was named the Big 8 Coach of the Year.

Nebraska leads the series 17-2-1. Last year in Stillwater, the Huskers played one of their most complete games of the season and defeated OSU, 36-0. Only three times since 1960, has Oklahoma State not lost to Nebraska—1960, OSU 7-NU 6 in Lincoln; 1961, OSU 16-NU 6 in Stillwater and 1973, a 17-17 tie in Stillwater.

So as today's Homecoming clash is about to start, Cornhusker fans everywhere welcome Johnson, his staff and players and all OSU fans to Memorial Stadium for the 109th straight sellout, a continuing NCAA record.

These cassette deck makers have very high standards.

And this is how they set them.

With TDK SA. It's the high bias reference standard for these major cassette deck manufacturers. Which means that when they set the high bias position on their decks, there's a TDK SA inside. Since all these decks are adjusted to sound their best with TDK SA, it stands to reason yours will, too.

A lot of deck owners agree. When they listen to the more than 35 manufacturers who recommend TDK SA, they try it. When they listen to their music on TDK SA, they're convinced. They feel TDK SA's Super Avilyn formulation handles their music better than any chrome tape. And TDK SA's Super Precision Mechanism assures years of reliable performance. Each TDK SA cassette is backed by a lifetime warranty.*

You can listen to all the cassettes that might meet the high bias standard. Or you can buy the one that sets it. TDK SA.

UNL's School of Journalism enters computer age with news editing system

By Bonita Eaton
Office of University Information

The clamor of typewriters and newswire machines, the pile of yellow typesetting tape and the task of proofreading are gone from most newspaper newsroom and composing rooms today.

Reporters have turned from the typewriter to computer terminals with keyboards, wire copy is transmitted via computer systems, editors have put aside their pencils, scissors and paste for editing terminals and the roles of typesetters and proofreaders have been eliminated.

It's the world of computer-age newspaper production.

And now students studying journalism at the University of Nebraska-Lincoln will have as an integral part of their instruction a working knowledge of computer systems used by most newspapers.

Michael Stricklin, assistant professor of journalism, figures 6,000 to 7,000 students in the School of Journalism will be exposed to the school's new $118,000 computer system during the life of the system, expected to be from seven to 10 years.

The system, which has been installed and is nearly 100 percent operable, was purchased with donations made by 17 newspaper publishing groups representing 16 of Nebraska's daily newspapers.

Spearheads Design

"There is not one nickel of public money in the system," said Stricklin, who has spearheaded the design for the equipment and chairs a School of Journalism equipment committee that also includes Joe R. Seacrest of the Lincoln Journal, the North Platte Telegraph and the Scotts Bluff Star-Herald, David Beliles of the Grand Island Independent and Allen Strunk of the McCook Gazette.

Newspapers for a long time, Stricklin said, discouraged the idea of journalism curriculums integrating computer systems. Recently, however, newspapers have spotted the importance of the computer in an instructional program and provided money for it.

"The philosophy of the faculty," Stricklin said, "is to work closely with the profession. We want to stay on the cutting edge of change. We are as sophisticated as one can be."

That sophistication includes 20 terminals—eight editing terminals and 12 reporting terminals—as well as memory storage systems, a telecommunication system and a printout system.

The two kinds of terminals are interactive but have different capabilities. "We really think of the reporter terminals as input terminals," Stricklin said. Reporters type stories into the video display terminals, then transfer the story to the editing terminals.

Terminal Features

Reporting terminals have features enabling reporters to delete or insert portions, boldface words and store stories. The terminals can do nearly everything the more complex editing terminals do, but with less ease than the editing terminals.

The editing terminals have a larger memory capacity, holding twice as many characters (computer jargon for letters, numerals and punctuation) as the reporter terminals.

An editing terminal, with a larger keyboard that offers shortcut features for editing, can combine information and move information around in a story at the touch of a button or two as editors edit copy. The editing terminals also make writing headlines a much easier task than it was when editors wrote heads by counting various-sized characters.

From the editing terminals, copy and headlines are sent to the memory system—four MicroStors and discs. Each disc holds a half-million characters, comparable to a half-mile of paper typesetting tape or 2,500 column inches of news copy.

The discs also act as a filing system for copy and can follow commands that allow for copy to flow to typesetting systems.

It is the most common system used by small newspapers in the United States—newspapers with circulation of 20,000 or less. The school estimates half of its news-editorial graduates are employed initially by newspapers of that size.

But Stricklin emphasizes the school will not use the system merely to train students on terminals, but will integrate the system as a journalistic tool, one they can understand the inside workings of as well as how to use it.

"We're not in the business of training people," he said. "The emphasis is on journalism decision making with a copy processing system."

Take out the Magic

"We're trying to take some of the magic out of it. If you want to put reporters and editors in creative control of the product, you've got to take out some of the magic."

"We want people to understand not just how to use the system but we want people to learn how to make journalism decisions using the modern tools."

The system will be introduced to journalism students during their sophomore year, integrated into reporting, editing and advertising classes.

The Summer Nebraskan newspaper, directed by staff members in the school, and the Journalist, the school's lab newspaper, are utilizing the system.

Copy stored in the Micro-Stor is sent to the Lincoln Journal for typesetting. The school, Stricklin said, is in contact with a potential donor to finance its own typesetting system.

The system's telecommunication capabilities are among its most versatile features.

With a small box called a programmable communicator, copy can be sent or received over telephone wires or can be sent to a typewriter-quality printer that produces hard copy.

"The name of the game seems to be telecommunications," Stricklin said. "It opens up a world for us."

Other major journalism schools in the United States, he said, do not have telecommunication capabilities with their systems.

And UNL is the only school to use the system for instructional purposes only; other schools produce student newspapers while UNL's student newspaper is not affiliated with the journalism program, except during the summer.

The system is capable of capturing two news stories. Associated Press and United Press International.

The scene in the newsroom up to this time: Hard wire copy was transmitted over machines, local copy was produced on typewriters, copy was edited with pencil and other tangible tools, and copy and headlines were set by a secretary on two typesetting machines and a headline machine.

Mix New With Old

The new ways of doing things, to be mixed with the old ways, will be a more realistic approach to teaching students about the journalism profession.

Computer processing is here to stay, Stricklin said, and many weekly newspapers as well as dailies use small systems that are similar in concept to UNL's. All newspapers, sometime in the future, will utilize computers.

"The signs are very clear. The computer does two things," Stricklin said. "From the journalist's point of view, these systems put the reporter and the editor in direct control of the copy. From the publisher's point of view, it's a more cost-effective way of doing business."

The journalism school's interest is not in saving time, but "as young journalists, we want our students to have as realistic a learning environment as possible."

Magazines, public information offices, news bureaus and public relations divisions also will be major users of computer systems. Even electronic mail—"It's coming," Stricklin said.

More than $120,000 was pledged by publishing groups for the journalism school equipment, valued at $170,000 on the open market. Donations, which ranged from $500 to $40,000, came from the Alliance Times-Herald, the Columbus Telegram, the Falls City Journal, the Gannett Newspaper Foundation (publisher of the Fremont Tribune), the Hastings Tribune, the Holdrege Citizen, the Lincoln Journal and Star Printing Company (along with Western Publishing Company, publisher of the North Platte Telegraph and the Scotts Bluff Star-Herald), the McCook Gazette, Norfolk News, the Omaha World-Herald Foundation, the Roy H. Park Foundation (Nebraska City News-Press), the Ben Snow Memorial Trust (formerly affiliated with the Fremont Tribune) and the Stauffer Foundation (publisher of the Beatrice Sun, the Grand Island Independent and the York News-Times).

Look who switched to Natural Light.

Nick Buoniconti switched to Natural Light because he prefers the taste.

He had no idea that Natural Light's great taste comes from using only the finest natural ingredients.

Or that there are no artificial ingredients in Natural Light, unlike some other light beers he had tried.

We don't think he even noticed the ingredients listed right on the label: Water, Barley malt, Rice, Hops, Yeast.

But Nick Buoniconti would agree. It's not the name that makes you good—it's what's inside that counts.

Ball Control — By Using the Forward Pass

A football maneuver deserving of more respect—at least by definition—is the short pass to the remaining back. It's called The Dump, The Layoff, The Check or Check-off, The Dink, The Valve as in safety valve, or any other diminishing description that comes to mind.

No longer is this "dump" something the quarterback throws away only as a last measure. As zone defenses become more sophisticated and less penetrable,

Fall Fashion Breakthrough

Cut chenille will add a timely touch to your wardrobe.

the tiny flip has gained up-front space in the playbook. More than an embarrassment to the quarterback, more than a mere safety valve, the short or even shorter pass in modern football is not only a standard low-risk call, but a key to ball control.

Typically, the quarterback has three or four or even five intended receivers... his primary or primaries go fairly long, the secondary or secondaries have medium routes and then, if those avenues are closed, there remains the little swing to the nearby halfback. If all goes well, the back has completed his initial blocking assignment and is free to catch and run. More than likely he will have but one potential tackler in the area, a lollypop situation for a runner. Maybe he'll advance only two or three yards, but on this kind of a one-on-one situation, he might well clear for seven or eight on the way to another first down. Beautiful, right?

Aha, the critic scoffs, that's like drawing X's and O's. It looks good on paper but defenses react to repeating patterns, and too many "valves" will simply get those backs smothered as the game wears on. True, but that's how life is in the flexible world of football. The valve remains a third choice of a passing QB but a vitally important choice nevertheless. Excessive pressure on any area relieves another. Perhaps the tight end is loose for 10 yards, or a flare becomes practical, or a curl to the flanker, and on and on. Football tacticians would make good accordionists. Their plays must vary—in and out, short and long.

The next critical voice will say, "But our team does not pass much. Our coach echoes the old protest that 'only three things can happen with a forward pass and two are bad.' No dispute. The running game, especially with powerful personnel, is the heart of the game. Most schools, including those consistently in the nation's Top Ten, adhere to the basic number of plays—two-thirds running, one-third passing.

However, let's examine the modern college "running" game. A good many recorded runs are actual runs-off-the-option, and the option includes a backward pass. In such situations, the quarterback dances along the line searching for an opening and when he doesn't find it, lures tacklers toward him until, at the final instant, he laterals to a trailing back. When done well, this is a good yardage, good control play and it comes off a form of the pass.

The statistician doesn't call it a pass, but in fact it's a high risk procedure that puts a "live" ball in the air. In contrast to the incomplete forward pass, an uncaught lateral can be recovered by the opposition. To be more accurate, this observer submits, game statistics should be separated to include yardage off the short as well as the long pass; running yardage off the straight handoff or snap, and "passing" yardage off the option lateral.

In that way we'd get a better understanding of ball control off the pass—both the forward and the lateral pass.

A classic confrontation to illustrate both philosophies occurred on September 9, 1978, when strong-running Oklahoma defeated pass-powered Stanford. For a while, this offensive show had the appearance of a 1000-yard game—500 on each side. It wound up with Oklahoma gaining a net 496 and Stanford 401. It also wound up, on the final play, with the ball flying 36 yards down to the Oklahoma end zone. Had Kenny Margerum, Stanford's All-America sophomore, been able to hold it, Stanford would have won on the extra point. He did not and Oklahoma prevailed, 35-29.

It was a skittery, exciting, wonderful college show. From a tactical view, though, this was a marvelous example of two daring, opposite offenses. Oklahoma had Billy Sims and other smashing drivers, and its coach was willing to accept some of the perils of the option to get Sims and friends into the open.

Statistics can be boring, but not these: Oklahoma EIGHT (8) fumbles, FOUR (4) lost. Stanford FOUR (4) pass interceptions.

Oklahoma 67 rushing attempts, Stanford 30.

Oklahoma 375 yards rushing, Stanford 102.

Stanford 49 pass attempts, 32 completed; Oklahoma 13 pass attempts, five completed, one intercepted. (Additionally, Stanford had four "pitches"—laterals to the halfback that, in this context, should be termed passes. All were attempted on early downs for ball control and all succeeded, for a total of 24 yards.)

Oklahoma 24 first downs, Stanford 22.

Those stats are almost even but indicate the tremendous difference in styles and attitudes. A wild, wild day, yet a remarkable documentation of two types of ball control.

The major point of this play-by-play re-examination, of course, is to demonstrate how two offense-minded college teams could be extremely conscious of controlling the ball while appearing to be hysterically overeager. Oklahoma had a history of fumbling but regarded the dangers—putting the ball everywhere, including in the air—worth the rewards. Stanford opted for the flexible pass attack with nine receivers, but another stat from that game is worth a special check: 17 passes were shorties to the backs, four over the line to the tight ends, and 11 to the wide receivers.

That ratio has become fairly standard now for passing teams, including the pros. The QB is not considered chicken if he doesn't unleash the bomb every other down. Moving the ball upfield in tiny chunks, while maintaining possession, is the mark of leadership. Obviously such leadership must include a passing arm with a camera brain. The quarterback has a number of pictures he must flash between the time he accepts the ball from the center and the time he releases. He must identify the defensive setup, with particular attention to the linebackers and cornerbacks. Then, while taking his backward steps, he must see from the corner of his eye how his receivers are maneuvering against their defenders. If he takes a seven-step drop, he should know by the fifth step where and to whom he will throw the ball.

The quick look downfield, through step 5, is crucial for a quality quarterback. Coaches suspect that many passing QBs can only focus on one-half the field while wheeling back, and will throw blindly to a primary receiver if rushed. Some of the great ones like Roger Staubach and Bart Starr learned in school how to look, and look again, before making the big decision.

Calling a play is not as difficult as fulfilling it. So let's take the easy way for a few paragraphs and fantasize ourselves into the passing quarterback's role in a midfield situation. Remember, our dominant thought here is ball control.

First down—We're going to try for five yards and we'll take what their defense will give us. Okay, let's call a play-action pass with the wide receiver going downfield 15 yards on a hook, the flanker crossing underneath beyond the line, the tight end blocking, fullback blocking, and the halfback prepared to move off his block if the ball must be dumped. Now, if the WR is open, we pump to him. If not, we dump to the halfback who (let's say) advances five.

Second down—Definitely a possession down, or control down, pass. Maybe an out to the sideline, or a WR comeback, or a short curl. We might be fortunate with a long gainer, but more likely we'd like a six yarder to the TE. Let's agree it's incomplete.

Third down—Yardage needed. Third and five is not for control, but for a first down. A screen is a ball-control pass with reasonable chance of success. Even better is a draw (a fake pass and run). We make only four yards.

Fourth down (and one)—The crowd says "Go for it." The coach and quarterback are not deaf. Given a reasonable position, like inside their 40, we might take a chance. The score and the amount of time left are important factors. In some instances this could be a long ball play, if the defense is drawn in; in others a quarterback sneak, but most likely a double tight end, old-fashioned line buck. (PS. We win.)

The defense against a passing team, especially one that employs the short (or ball control) type, is not simple. Rushing the quarterback is still the No. 1 method. He can't throw if he's flat on his seat. Linebackers have great responsibility, in particular the inside LB who stands close to the line and can "read" a QB's eyes on the drop back. Middle linebackers are pests for QBs. Often they sneak to one side or the other while the play is beginning and when the QB gives it the quick look he can be deceived by the false motions and lulled into an interception.

Well, so much for tactics and techniques. Now you have the spectator's option of doing what comes naturally ... watching the ball.

The next time the book club gets together for debate about life after death, the future availability of fossil fuels and comparably unknowable truths, you might want to raise another topic for discussion. Innocently prepare a soft drink, wipe a potato chip across the clam dip and ask, "Who do you feel are more effective placement specialists—conventional kickers or the soccer stylers?"

You may not get an answer, but you are sure to get some strange looks.

The question is not new. To devotees of college football, the on-going rivalry between conventional and soccer-style kickers is as familiar as the post pattern.

For most of college football's history, placements (kickoffs and field goal attempts) were the private domain of the conventional, straight-ahead kickers. Often, the players selected were hefty linemen who did not win the job so much as they were stuck with it. The philosophy went something like this: A man with a large foot and a healthy bit of bulk could kick further than a man without them.

Soccer style vs.

Conventional kicking

Though it is not readily apparent, there must have been an ounce of logic buried in there somewhere.

That attitude prevailed until an undeniable fact was discovered. On college campuses across the land—often on fields adjoining football stadia—frail, indefatigable little jack rabbits were playing a European concoction called soccer. And, horror of horrors, these little men with their short pants and impressive grade point averages could kick a soccer ball with more skill, distance and accuracy than any strong-footed offensive lineman.

A dilemma ensued. College coaches wanted to win games, but they also wanted to preserve football for manly, burly, beefy men. To invite in soccer's best booters was likened by some football head coaches to a shapely blonde asking the resident intellect to a drive-in movie. It just wasn't done.

The change in attitude came gradually. At the start, soccer style kickers dripped into the game like water from a faulty faucet. The success of those sidewinding pioneers increased the flow of soccer style kickers in college football to a steady dribble, however, and before long, the old and irrational objection to outsiders on the inside was no more. Ability to split the winding dominance has occurred with both completeness and startling speed. Whereas the important kicking question not too many years ago was: "Is there a place in football for soccer style?" intelligent men now argue whether the straight-on kickers will soon go the way of the hoola-hoop and dinosaur. On that subject, there is less than unanimity of opinion.

One eastern college soccer coach, whose players have gone to the football varsity and on to the pros, worries more about the end than the means. "If you can kick the ball through the goal posts, it makes no difference whether you hit it with your toe, your instep or your heel," he says.

"Nobody's going to pay much attention to how you lined up, how you approached the ball and if you ever played high school soccer as long as you succeeded.

"Personally, I'd rather see a kid hit the ball with his instep (as soccer style kickers do) because you get a greater surface area in contact with the ball. It's generally a route to greater accuracy. But there's no way I'm going to monkey with a conventional kicker, tell him soccer technique is superior."

Indeed, the question of style raises odd questions. Though the desired result is identical, there is a vast difference between the methods used by the sidewinders and straight-on proponents.

The beauty of the conventional method is its simplicity. The kicker simply paces off several steps in a line directly behind the holder or tee, does an about-face and marches back toward the ball. When he returns to the football, he brings his toe to the ball. The desired result, naturally, is a high, true boot. The period of study is long and sometimes frustrating.

"Conventional kickers take longer to develop and coaches aren't always long on patience, especially with kickers," explains a straight-on kicker, formerly from a southern school, who now stars in the professional ranks. He added, "I don't think soccer style kickers get more distance and I'll match my accuracy from 55 yards and in against anybody's."

The sidewinding technique is very different. As the name suggests, the kicker approaches from the side. The swing of the leg, unlike the technique used by conventional kickers, involves not only the toe, but the leg, thigh and even groin muscles. In contrast to straight-on kickers, sidewinders strike the ball with the instep of the kicking foot, thus applying more surface area of the shoe to more surface area of the ball. Soccer coaches and record books suggest that the result is greater distance and accuracy than conventional kickers could ever hope for.

"The soccer way, there's less chance of a complete error than when you're taking the ball on the toe of the shoe and putting it up against a much smaller part of the ball," the soccer coach insists. "The chance of the thing going completely awry is increased."

The coach added, parenthetically, "But if you can get the job done with the toe, that's fine."

One of college football's finest kickers, a sidewinder who finished in the NCAA's top 15 last year, suspects the increased use of thigh and groin muscles accounts for sidewinders' consistently superior results.

"We use a lot more muscles in our legs," he says. "The conventional guy uses only the top part of his legs. Soccer guys use those muscles, the groin muscles and a lot more of the body."

"For me, it's just like playing golf—exactly. When I'm kicking, it's like swinging a nine-iron. It's a nice fluid swing that I can repeat time and again."

That is not to say conventional kickers cannot do the same. Straight-on booter Dale Castro of Maryland was second, behind sidewinder Ish Ordenez of Arkansas, in overall field goal success last year. Castro hit an impressive 17 of 21 field goal tries (81 percent) and booted an average of 1.55 three-pointers per game. Don Stump of McNeese St. (15 of 21 FGs) and Allan McElroy of Alabama (15 of 22) were conventional kickers who placed in the NCAA's top 10 last year.

It also should be said that the record for the longest field goals in Div. I college football history is held, in part, by Russell Erxleben and Steve Little, both conventional kickers from Southwest Conference schools. The distance is a cosmic 67 yards.

Another successful sidewinder remains unimpressed. "Ten years down the line, I see the soccer stylist really starting to dominate the game," he says.

"Because of the availability of soccer players and their being brought up technically able to kick a ball, those are the people who will do the kicking."

In this sidewinder's view, the only thing that can extract the conventional kickers from the disrepute into which they have fallen is—get this—the creation of a new sport.

"Soccer, a game that puts a premium on kicking with the instep, has made sidewinders what they are," he said. "If there was a game which involved only kicking the ball with your toe, then we'd really have a conflict here."

"At the moment, there is no breeding ground for the conventional kicker. Whereas soccer kickers get instruction, the conventional guy is mainly self-taught. If that ever changes, watch out. We might be kicking them from end zone to end zone."

goal posts and reach the end zone, as it always should have been, was at last the only kicking criterion.

In the years that have passed since they first teed it up, soccer style kickers have made great strides. Today, they are not only accepted by the college football establishment, they dominate it. Last year, for example, only three of the top 10 field goal kickers in college football were conventional kickers, according to the National Collegiate Athletic Association. The remaining seven were sidewinders. Even more telling is this statistic: Of the top 55 kickers in the college game last year, 40 succeeded with soccer style.

And finally, a fact most college coaches must already suspect: A year ago, the soccer style kickers in Division I of college football split goal posts on 59.4 percent of their tries. The conventional kickers were not as successful, hitting on only 56.7 percent.

The shift from conventional to side-

THE NICKEL DEFENSE: HOW IT WORKS

by David McCollum, Arkansas DEMOCRAT

You've been asked to be in a formal wedding party. Men, do you buy a tuxedo when you know you'll have occasion to wear it only once or twice the next few years? Women, do you purchase an elegant dress that will only be appropriate for one occasion?

The dilemma is similar to one that confronts the collegiate coach concerning the practicality of the nickel defense. Unless a team commonly roams among a certain specialized strata, the nickel defense may not be worth the price—it's a luxury in the Nieman-Marcus catalogue of college defenses.

Practice time and the makeup of a team's schedule are the major issues in the effectiveness of the defense.

For some schools, the nickel can result in great dividends. For other teams, it just doesn't make sense.

Do you put a set of sleek radial tires with full chrome mags on the rusty ole jalopy you use only for trips to the favorite fishing hole?

The nickel defense, so named because a team will insert a fifth defensive back into the game during an obvious passing situation, is a highly specialized maneuver. It can be flashy, spectacular and prompt raves. A price must be paid for its use.

The defense has become almost extinct in some regions and the option offense is the predator. A high-powered option attack is to the nickel defense like a mongoose is to snakes. Thus, in regions where option football and scrambling quarterbacks are dominant, the nickel defense is seldom seen. In conferences where there are several teams with dangerous dropback passing attacks, such as the Pac-10 or Western Athletic Conference, or where option football in relation to the quarterback has been downplayed, such as the Big Ten, the defense is more common.

"The team you would use it against is primarily the dropback passing team that you know would pass most of the time on third and long or in obvious passing situations," said a highly successful major college coach. "We don't see that type of team that often anymore, so the time it takes to install the nickel defense is not worth the use."

Before going into a more detailed account of the pros and cons of the defensive scheme, a formal introduction is needed.

The nickel defense is not new to college football.

"It's like a lot of things you see in football," said a major college defensive coordinator. "It has been used for a long time, but it has become more glamorized and has acquired a mystique because someone gave it a nickname. I've seen it used for about 15 or 20 years, and I think it really became popular in the days when the emphasis in college football all over was on the pass and you saw a lot of dropback quarterbacks. It received the name more recently."

The basic nickel defense involves substituting an extra defensive back in passing situations, but some teams have even begun inserting two extra backs.

From that point, the defense becomes more complicated because of the various options. The defensive back can be substituted for a linebacker, an end, a noseguard and what the defense does with the extra back can depend on the position change. The extra pass defender is many times used to double team a standout split end or flanker or to provide pass coverage on a back. He can also be used to double team a tight end or to provide double coverage on both sides for a team that uses two split ends. The back can blitz and on the next series he might fake the same blitz and cover a back.

The defensive team can also utilize the extra defensive back to provide extra coverage in a zone defense. The defense can rush three men and play zone with the other eight, which would provide coverage of the three deep zones and still free a safety to freelance the entire field.

"A team once put an extra defensive back in against us, but dropped its noseguard on pass coverage. Our quarterback didn't recognize it and it resulted in an interception," said a coach of a major college known for its passing attack. "I've seen a team put the back in at tackle and he would cover one of our backs. The main thing the defense has done to us is to take away the effect of throwing to our backs. It's harder to get them open in the open field. Then, you're forced to go to the deeper routes. If you do, you're throwing into the strength of the defense. It can give them a big play."

"It's difficult to throw against if you live and die by the pass. If your quarterback doesn't recognize the defense and make the right adjustment, you have a turnover."

The sophistication of option attacks has also made the nickel defense vulnerable to big plays on the offensive end.

"Against an option team, you come up short defensively with the nickel defense even on third and long," said a major college coach in the Southwest. "You're substituting somebody who will have to play an option and he may not be used to that and he might not be able to make all the necessary adjustments. You don't get good pitch support and you're changing option responsibilities with your personnel. Even in a zone defense, you can get hit in a soft spot in that zone with a sweep and it could result in a big play or a touchdown."

"For a good option team with a good option quarterback," the coach continued, "it's not that difficult to make first down on third and six or seven against a defense that is soft on running support. And you could get a lot more."

"You're definitely more vulnerable in your underneath coverage in a nickel defense against an option football team," said a defensive coordinator for a school in the Southeast. "You just can't get run support against the pitch. It's something we can't chance against most of the teams we play. If there's a breakdown, it's a long gain. A good scrambling quarterback can kill you in it."

"We used to use the defense a good bit,"

Defensive backs flood the field in the nickel defense.

but it got to the point where the scouts in the press box for the other team would spot it immediately when we substituted," said the coach of the pass-oriented team. "They just came at us with the option, knocked everybody off the line of scrimmage and made a chunk of yardage. We'd put a back in for a defensive end, and when you do that, you're vulnerable to the option sweep if they recognize it. The lineman would knock our back clear back about six or seven yards, then they were out of the gate."

Although all the coaches interviewed conceded the nickel defense can result in a turnover against a passing team in certain situations, they noted that the multitude of options and changing responsibilities among defensive personnel makes it a difficult defense to install as part of the overall scheme. Many coaches don't have time for such luxury.

"When you're deciding what your defensive package will be for any particular year, anything you include in the package means you have to spend practice time on it," said a defensive coordinator who has coached in several regions of the country. "It takes time to keep people refreshed on all their assignments in the various options of the nickel defense. If we had three or four teams on our schedule that threw the ball and had dangerous passing attacks like Brigham Young or Stanford, we might incorporate it into the defensive package for that year. If there aren't a lot of throwing teams on the schedule, it's not worth the time you spend practicing it. You just can't stick a defensive alignment in a closet somewhere and use it for special occasions. You've got to spend time polishing it.

"Any defense is only good as long as you can execute it," he continued. "No. 1, you may be wasting valuable practice time on a defense that is not practical for your conference. No. 2, because it's so different and has so many changing responsibilities, it may not be worth the time as far as what you eventually get out of it. Maybe you get an advantage for a few plays in one game—is that worth a whole season of practice time just to keep the players refreshed? That's a decision that's different for everybody."

"Any time you go with a substitute, you're running the risk of someone trying to do things he's not familiar with," said another head coach. "It can change a whole lot of assignments. The key thing is time. It got to the point with us that we were spending too much time practicing trying to give people different looks and we got ourselves confused and had breakdowns in the process. That's why we quit using the nickel defense."

An offensive coordinator, who has served as an assistant for several teams in different areas of the country, is not sure the nickel defense is an automatic advantage for defenders.

"We do not attack an entire defensive scheme with our passing game," he said. "Our attack is based on beating one or two individuals, not a whole defense. No matter what the defense, in long yardage situations, we'll try to get three of our people in an area where the other team has two, or two where it has one. The nickel defense could cause us to audibize a lot to get people in those gaps, but it would not change our basic offense in attacking it.

"Besides," he continued, "I don't think the length of the pass route is as important as timing. I think timing is the key to the passing game. The other team knows where you have to go to get the first down and that's where it will stack its defense. Most times, I think you'll see the receiver having to run the ball after he catches it to make the necessary yardage. That's where timing comes in."

and mid-size at the very same time.

No mirrors, no wires, nothing up our sleeve. Citation really is both compact and mid-size. Watch closely.

Compact on the outside.

Outside, Citation measures only 15 feet bumper to bumper. That's trim enough to fit into 3/4 of a parking space.

Mid-size on the inside.

No hocus-pocus. What we did was to mount Citation's engine sideways, giving you enough room inside to seat five adults comfortably. With space left over in the hatchback that could even surprise Houdini. There's also a removable shelf panel that makes every bit of cargo just seem to disappear.

You've got to drive it to believe it.

Of course, there's a lot more about Citation than meets the eye.

- There's its front-wheel-drive traction on wet roads, through snow and in mud.
- The way its ride can make a stretch of road seem a whole lot smoother.
- Its impressive acceleration.
- And yet still, in the hatchback, wagon-like convenience.

Why not see your Chevy dealer about buying or leasing the new Chevy Citation. You might be amazed. It could be just the car you have in mind.

It's a whole new kind of compact car.

In simple terms, why every Honda has front-wheel drive.

Have you noticed how more and more car manufacturers are switching to front-wheel drive these days?

We're not surprised. We knew the advantages of front-wheel drive a long, long time ago.

In fact, only Honda has sold all its cars in the U.S. with front-wheel drive and a transverse-mounted engine. (Not to mention having sold more than anyone else too.)

So just what are the advantages?

For a start, we've designed a car that's smaller on the outside but with more than enough room inside for both driver and passengers.

This is partly due to the fact that there's no driveshaft running through the passenger compartment. So your passengers have more foot and legroom.

Eliminating the driveshaft also reduces another problem. Because the driveshaft can be a source of noise and vibration. But the advantages of front-wheel drive don't stop at improved space utilization and comfort.

Front-wheel drive puts more of the weight on the front driving wheels. That means better traction.

And since driving power is applied in the direction the car is being steered, it helps you through the turns.

We could go on.

But the only way to really appreciate our front-wheel drive is to test-drive a Honda yourself.

The Civic. The car that was named Motor Trend magazine's Import Car of the Year.

The Accord. Our luxury car.

And the Prelude. Our idea of a sports car.

They all have front-wheel drive.

So if that's what you're looking for in a car, it's worth remembering that Honda is out in front all the way.

HONDA

We make it simple.

Merrill Lynch says, close to home.

Don't misunderstand. There's nothing wrong with searching far and wide for investment ideas. It's not easy to get rich these days.

But to search on your own is a full-time job-and-a-half. You have to read everything, digest it all, analyze the information, act on it...and do it fast, because opportunities become ancient history in precious little time.

Meanwhile, some of the best investment ideas are sitting practically on your doorstep, at a nearby office of Merrill Lynch.

We have the resources and the people to know, really know, investment opportunities as diverse as oil drilling partnerships and Treasury Bill futures, options and retirement plans.

Our research team is the best on Wall Street—in Wall Street's own opinion. And we make it easy to use that unrivaled resource: computer terminals at every Merrill Lynch office can instantly print out up-to-the-minute opinions on more than 1200 stocks.

Best of all is the way we tailor our advice to your requirements. Before offering a single suggestion, your Merrill Lynch Account Executive will spend a long while listening. Finding out what you really need. Because the smartest investment plans—the plans most likely to succeed—start with a clear definition of where they want to go. Are you looking for security or the opportunity to speculate? For current income or capital growth? What you tell us determines in large part what we tell you.

So we make a point of developing, for each customer, a sound long-term investment strategy, and we encourage you to stick with it and not be sidetracked by investment fads or temporary market aberrations. And we give you the security of knowing that we're going to stick with you and see you through to your goals. Merrill Lynch has more than $800 million in capital resources working for you, and we plan to be advising you long after all those fad investments have been written off.

So drop in at a nearby Merrill Lynch office and look over some of the brochures that explain our philosophy and way of doing things. Don't worry...we won't ask you to buy anything. In fact, we probably won't even let you, until we get to know you better.

though that may be the case at the University of Colorado, which has a 1,400-pound buffalo for a mascot, or at Texas, which has a 1,000-pound steer as its namesake.

Are you finding all of this a little unbearable? It just so happens that they have the cutest little bear cubs as mascots at Baylor. And California once had a live bear cub as a mascot, but it got to be too big and dangerous, so it was replaced by a student in a bear costume, who, supposedly, is less dangerous.

Actually, that has become the normal course of action. Most mascots today are students dressed in costumes. But not necessarily. There are still all kinds of critters serving as live mascots.

There is no accurate record of how many schools employ live animals as mascots, but one thing is certain. Their number is diminishing. And for a variety of reasons.

Sometimes, the animals are just too rare—such as Boston College's bald eagle, which is on the endangered species list. Sometimes, schools have been forced to succumb to outside pressures, such as the University of Oregon, which had to give up its live duck mascot, named Puddles, after repeated complaints from the Humane Society. Likewise, the University of Wisconsin replaced its live badger mascot for health and safety reasons.

Sometimes, there are inside pressures. Many universities, with new artificial turf in their stadiums, just don't want all kinds of wild animals roaming around on their new carpeting.

And sometimes, it has just been too difficult to find caretakers. Who, for instance, wants to look after Florida A&M's rattlesnake or Florida's Albert the Alligator?

That is not the case at Louisiana State University, however. The live tiger that serves as the LSU mascot, Mike IV, is watched over carefully by both the students and the school's renowned veterinary department. Mike IV resides in an air-conditioned cage across from Tiger Stadium and receives the best of care. Why, seven years ago, when it was rumored that Mike was involved in an accident, fans called to donate blood.

And last semester, LSU students voted to add $2 to their activity fees in order to remodel Mike's quarters so that they more closely resemble his natural habitat. The amount raised by the students will be matched by the university, and the total is expected to reach $100,000.

Now really. These mascots are supposed to be ferocious. That's the whole idea behind mascots. They're supposed to be mean, nasty, the fiercer the better.

Texas A&I, for instance, once had a javelina for a mascot. That javelina was so fierce that it once bit the school's president. And Houston once used its mascot, a cougar named Shasta IV, to guard its lockerroom after a series of thefts.

But for every one of those stories, there are several where the big, tough mascots have turned out to be old, scaredy cats.

Take Washington State's cougar mascot. Now, the Cougar is the most ferocious mascot in the Pacific-10 Conference. But in 1965, when the Pac-10 was still the Pac-8, students from Gonzaga University kidnapped the cougar, named him Butch VI. And, what's worse, when they brought him back—before a basketball game at Spokane—the Gonzaga cheerleaders were petting him. Even more embarrassing, when one student stuck his hand in Butch's cage, Butch licked it. So much for ferocious.

Or how about the supposedly ferocious Baylor Bears? Why, the cubs used as mascots by Baylor have a fondness for Dr. Pepper and 7-Up. The only thing vaguely nasty about them was the time one of the cubs got his collar and chain wrapped around his neck while trying to climb a tree. He choked to death. In light of Baylor's 0-10 record that season, however, some observers ruled the death a suicide.

And then there is Ralphie II. Ralphie II is a three-year-old cow buffalo that weighs 1,400 pounds and serves as the mascot for the University of Colorado. Ralphie II replaced Ralphie I, who, after 13 years, retired after the last game of the 1978 season.

Now, after 13 years, Ralphie I was perfect, and the students loved her. She was even elected homecoming queen one year. She had her routine down pat. When the band struck up "Glory, Glory Colorado," Ralphie stormed onto the field, raced down the sideline and back, pausing only to snort at the opposing bench. Then she stormed back to her trailer and was returned to the ranch where she lives.

But it took Ralphie II a little time to pick up the routine. After her rather lethargic debut at that last game in 1978, one university official muttered, "She might as well have been a cow."

But after a summer's worth of practice, Ralphie II returned for the 1979 season raring to go. And, university officials report, she has been properly ferocious ever since.

Unlike Bevo X. Bevo X is the longhorn steer that serves as the mascot for the University of Texas. Bevo is slightly tranquilized before he takes his place in the end zone of every game.

But he is still pretty tough. Earl Campbell, the former football star from Texas who now plays for the Houston Oilers, once ran into Bevo in the end zone. Neither of them was hurt. Campbell got up. Bevo, who was lying down, continued to lie down. The collision was ruled a draw.

Ralph Jordan, the retired Auburn football coach, has had a few run-ins himself. He was once chased by Tennessee's blue tick coon dog and almost run over by the Tennessee walking horse. Both of those animals are native symbols of Tennessee, although the current dog, Smokey IV, is a mite more timid. According to his donor, the Rev. W. C. Brooks of Knoxville, he was spooked by firecrackers when he was young and has never quite recovered.

Not so for Uga, the Georgia bulldog that once attacked Jordan. Uga III, whose name is formed from the abbreviation of the University of Georgia, is every bit as ferocious as his grandfather, Uga I, and his father Uga II, both of whom are buried under the scoreboard in Sanford Stadium.

Don't tangle with the Houston Cougar.

The Washington Husky, Regents Denali.

Two of college football's feathered friends: the Rice Owl and Auburn's War Eagle.

Actually, Georgia's first mascot was a goat, back around 1892. But by 1894, the goat had been replaced by a white bull terrier. No one is quite sure why the change was made, but there are a couple of theories. One says that a sportswriter reported that "Georgia held on with a bulldog's tenacity," and the nickname stuck. Others claim that the Georgia bulldog is a cousin of the Yale bulldog, because many of Georgia's early presidents were Yale men.

If all that is true, Uga III should come to the aid of his Yale cousin. The Yale mascot is Bingo, a female bulldog, who is being forced to go by the official name of Hand-some Dan.

While handsome might be an inappropriate adjective for a female mascot, it certainly fits male mascots like Happy VI and Traveler III, the horses that represent Texas Tech and USC, respectively.

Now, Oklahoma has a couple of ponies, Boomer and Sooner, who pull a small prairie schooner around the field, but they are no match for the handsome horses at the other schools.

Happy VI is the black stallion that leads the Texas Tech football team onto the field. That tradition started at the 1954 Gator Bowl when Joe Kirk Fulton, dressed in a scarlet and black cape and a slouch hat, jumped onto a black horse and led the Red Raiders onto the field.

Traveler III is a white Arabian, ridden by Richard Saukko, who dresses as Tommy Trojan and charges around the Coliseum track at USC football games. (At one time, USC had two live mascots—Traveler I and George Tirebiter, a scruffy dog who was hit by a car and killed in 1950. Before his untimely death, George had his moments. He once bit Oski, the California bear mascot, on the nose. Some say, though, that George never got over the embarrassment of being kidnapped by UCLA students, who shaved the initials U-C-L-A on his back in 1947.)

Speaking of kidnappings, probably the most sought-after mascot is the Army mule, which, Cadets boast, has never been kidnapped. By comparison, the Cadets have gotten Navy's goat a few times. Why, the Air Force Cadets even managed to kidnap Ralphie I and paraded her around as a big buf-faloburger.

The mule and the goat are among the earliest college mascots. The mule made its debut in 1899, six years after the first goat, El Cid, made its appearance.

Tradition says that the goat must always be facing Navy's offensive goal so that the Navy quarterback will always be sure that he is going in the right direction.

But then, that's what all mascots are for, isn't it? To give support and bring good luck. The word mascot comes from the Portuguese word mascotto, which means sorcery. Of course, everybody knows that mascots are just for fun. There's really nothing to this good luck stuff. Or is there?

The Arkansas nickname is the Razorbacks. Actually, razorbacks are extinct, so the university used a mean, mixed-breed hog as a mascot.

In 1977, the mascot, named Red III, escaped and broke into a barnyard near Barryville, Ark. A farmer trying to protect his prized sow, shot and killed Red III.

That afternoon, the Razorbacks suffered their only defeat of the 1977 season, a 13-9 setback at the hands of Texas.

NOW I CAN GAIN 466,400 YARDS ON JUST ONE TANKFUL.

Yes. You've read it right.

Paul Hornung, one of football's premier running backs, can still gain thousands of yards on the ground.

This time with the Volkswagen Rabbit. Imagine. 466,400 yards.

Which means you can drive from Lambeau Field in Green Bay to Soldier Field in Chicago (and with plenty to spare) without having to stop for gas.

And just take a look at these stats:

With the optional 5-speed manual transmission, you can pick up an EPA estimated [25] miles per gallon, 40 MPG highway estimate. (Use estimated MPG for comparison to other cars. Mileage may vary with speed, weather and trip length. Actual highway mileage will probably be less.)

And there's more to gain by driving a Rabbit than valuable yards.

There's also quickness.

At the snap, the Rabbit can bring you from 0 to 50 in only 8.3 seconds. Leaving some sports cars in the backfield.

With the Rabbit's front-wheel drive, there's great maneuverability. Which makes moving in and out of tough spots (and finding openings) a lot easier.

And as to comfort, there's enough room so that even four members of the Pack don't have to feel like they're packed.

But probably what's most comforting is that you don't have to be a fullback to make all these gains.

Just a drive in our hatchback will do.

VOLKSWAGEN DOES IT AGAIN

STUDENT BODY RIGHT

by Jack Disney, Los Angeles HERALD-EXAMINER

The play bears all the impact and subtlety of a billy club. In an era of football sophistication, it is the game's link to a primeval age.

The play has come to be popularly known as Student Body Right. But that is a misnomer. It could just as well be called Student Body Left.

The compelling thing about Student Body Right is that its construction is so simple. It could have been designed by soiled eight-year-old fingers in playground dirt: "Everybody block while I run around end."

Yet it did not achieve widespread attention, in its present context, until the early '60s when it was resurrected from the single wing glory days.

The play is so basic in concept that if Princeton and Rutgers had playbooks in that historic first game, prehistoric Student Body Right might be preserved today.

The play found a contemporary residence when a West Coast coach wondered if it might be the response to eight-man defensive fronts popular at the time.

"It was developed as a solution to the Arkansas-50 defense," explained one of his assistants. "We were looking at films in 1962 when we decided to try the power sweep off the I-formation.

"The idea was to give the back the chance to get outside, either side, with equal speed. It was as versatile a running situation as you could give a tailback."

Reasoning that defenses would react to the sweep in various ways, the coach assigned his backs keys; much in the manner in which a linebacker reads keys. Example: If the defensive player moved a certain way, the back would cut in a predetermined direction.

At that time, the play was baptized 28-Pitch, and it would unfold with the quarterback pitching to the tailback.

"It's all finesse," deadpans a former All-America guard who used to lead the play. "Kind of like a building falling on you."

"It's the one play where everybody is involved, doing something," he continues. "Every block matters. And for an offensive lineman, that kind of contact is important, the kind you can take pride in."

"It comes down to big man on big man; one on one. It's just dominating the other guy."

"Whatever finesse is involved, and there is very little, is extremely subtle," says a midwestern coach, who runs a slight variation of 28-Pitch.

"You have to have the right kind of personnel though, if you're going to make it your stock in trade."

Student Body Right's most strategic practitioners, in addition to the tailback, are the tight end and strongside tackle.

At some schools, players are recruited with the 28-Pitch in mind. Specifically, the tight end and the strong tackle must be very physical and very tall.

"The tight end, for example, has to be able to execute the play, period," says one coach who has had tremendous success with Student Body Right. "If he can't make the 28-Pitch go, he doesn't go."

The height requirement for the tight end and strong tackle is necessary because of the blocking technique dictated by the play.

"It's leverage blocking while in a raised-up position," explains a coach. "You've got to get up in your opponent's face and screen him off."

"These two players essentially attack the outside shoulder of their opponents and stay with it until the tailback can get outside."

continued

"The guy getting blocked figures the only way he can get off the block is to give up ground, and that, after all, is what the play is all about."

Meantime, the strongside guard's assignment on Student Body Right is to pull and seek out the strongside linebacker.

"It gives a lineman a lot of good opportunities," says a former All-America guard. "When I pulled down the line on that play, anything in the clipping zone was fair game ... easy game."

The fullback is another key player in leading the way. But what the entire play boils down to is trying to generate as much power as possible.

The basis of the play is the run, certainly—with as much physical force as a team can muster. There's no subtlety involved. It's the offense trying to ram the play down the other team's throat.

The ballcarrier must be physical, too. At some schools, players are selected as tailbacks simply on the basis of how they can run that one play.

By design, the end result of Student Body Right is as pedestrian as the execution.

"It's not really a big-gain play," says a coach from the Southeast. "Because it's such a physical play, its value lies in its ability to wear down defenses."

"It may gain only two yards in the first quarter. But it's gaining eight by the fourth."

A tailback, whose bread and butter used to be labeled 28-Pitch, adds:

"It's not a play we utilized to get points. It's a play that wears a defense down mentally as much as it does physically."

"In the fourth quarter, that play is there, even if it wasn't in the first. Even if we lost yardage, we were beating people up on that play. It tells later in the game."

One coach, reflecting on his devotion to the play, has said a prerequisite is patience.

"The key is to be patient. We were playing our archrival one year and our tailback was having one of those days. He could do that. Look bad, get racked up, fumble. Then you'd look up and he'd be in the end zone."

"Two of my assistants wanted to take him out that day. They said, 'Take him out, he's killing us.' I said, 'One more play.' He fumbled again. My assistants were screaming. I said, 'Just wait. He'll do it. You've got to be patient.'"

"The next play he ran 28-Pitch 67 yards for a touchdown and we won the game. I should have fired both those guys."

Adaptations of the power-I can be seen in every section of the country now. And with the power-I comes some version of Student Body Right. At smaller schools, the appellation is much more accurate than elsewhere.

Dominance on the line makes the Student Body Right play run like a clock.

It has been estimated that the formation and its attendant resources are used by more colleges than any other offense. One recent estimate pegged the number at 50, which is considerable when figuring the number of formations employed.

USC, the modern cradle of Student Body Right, ran the play 107 times last year, 18 years after its inception. Its effect obviously hasn't dulled over the years, over the generations, no matter its guise.

"The concept is still sound," says a Big Eight coach. "It's still based on good blocking schemes and it lets a good back either go where the blocking takes him or else take enough time to find a hole somewhere else."

"It is effective because it forces an opponent to defend a very wide area, an area the width of a football field."

Notes a Pac-10 assistant: "It's the kind of play we have to run perfectly for it to work. We practice it. Oh, how we practice it."

"We may not intend to run it once during practice and we end up running it 30 times. You see, if there's a breakdown, it won't work. And if you don't practice, you have breakdowns."

Unlike its many counterparts that seem to depend on deception, Student Body Right is testimony to redundancy.

"We ran it every game last season and everybody knew it was coming," says a West Coast coach. "It averaged 7.8 yards per carry even while running it well over 100 times."

He shakes his head out of reverence for Student Body Right. "As long as I coach this game," he says, "I'll use that play."

The tailback should be cat-quick and durable.

WALTER CAMP

The Father of College Football

Walter Camp's sobriquet, "The Father of American Football," is more than just a fanciful title invented by some sports publicist for promotional purposes. When Camp brought his athletically-gifted body and systematic brain to football, the game was little more than a slightly modified version of English rugby. Walter's direct influence carried football into the U.S.A.'s 20th Century.

Two of Camp's many innovations alone are enough to have earned him the title of football's father. The first revolutionary Camp invention was the scrimmage. In rugby, and in the 1880 version of football, the ball was put into play by a scrimmage, a disorderly circle of players from both teams gathered around the ball and, at the referee's signal, fighting madly for its possession.

Camp established the scrimmage line in 1880, with one team in definite possession of the ball and able to put it into play. The ramification of this departure from rugby was to permit a team the opportunity to map out a strategy for advancing the ball since they would know just when its possession was theirs, instead of having to depend upon the luck of the scrim.

Walter Camp's second stroke of organizational genius began as a seemingly simple rules variation. The year was 1888 and Camp decided that defensive players were at a great disadvantage when trying to catch and wrestle down by the shoulders a speeding ball carrier. Thus, he advanced legislation that permitted the tackler to hit below the waist and as far down as the knees. A corollary to this rule was that blockers must now keep their arms in close to their bodies. Almost immediately, football formations took on the shape we now recognize. Previously, with the advantage to the runner, the formations, if they can be so called, were field-wide. That deployment enabled the ball carrier to either go one-on-one with a defenseman, or if he faced a gang, to lateral to an open colleague. Blockers had been allowed to help by locking arms in front of the ball carrier, thus providing a wall of interference.

With the new rule, formations were pulled in tight to provide the blocking once achieved by locked arms. Planned interference had to be arranged to help fend off the new, deadly efficient knee high tackle. Skillful inside maneuvering became paramount and football was on its way.

Camp's involvement with sports was a lot more than just a cerebral one. Born and raised in New Haven, Walter proved himself the fastest and best prep athlete in that Connecticut city. In 1876, as an aspiring physician, he entered Yale University and quickly found a niche as the dominant athlete on campus, representing that school in every varsity sport that existed. He was an excellent swimmer, tennis player, gymnast and track man. The currently used hurdle step is a Camp invention.

In baseball, Camp was a stellar pitcher, an early master of the curve ball and two-time captain of the nine. But it was football that fired Camp's imagination and as a halfback he played six varsity seasons, two as captain of the squad. A long distance punter and drop kicker of historical merit, Walter may well have thrown football's first forward pass. The scene was an 1876 football game and as frosh halfback, Camp was being tackled. He spotted an open teammate and tossed the ball forward chances, of course. "If I didn't have any walk-ons, I wouldn't have any team," says one Division III coach.

But even bowl-bound Division I teams have them, those rare young men who somehow slipped through everyone's recruiting nets but can play the game, nevertheless.

"They're out there," says one major college coach. "There aren't as many as they think. But there are enough that you can't afford to take anyone lightly. You never know when a real player might show up."

This will happen, on the average, maybe twice a year.

"If you have two walk-ons in one season who can step in and start or see considerable playing time, I'd say you're well ahead of the game," says another coach. "Any more than that would be very unusual."

But there will be more walk-ons on the squad. A number of such players fill out the "scout" teams used to run opponents' plays and otherwise do the things which must be done during a football practice.

During spring practice, as many as two dozen walk-ons may try out for the average college team. "In the spring, you try to give every athlete a shot to see if he has any chance," a coach explains.

"In the fall, you'll invite maybe 10 or 12 of those back. And maybe you'll end up with eight by the end of the season."

"A player turning out in the fall for the first time has less chance because you have less time to look at him."

No matter when he turns out, a walk-on has a better chance of making the team at some positions than others.

The brightest opportunity, without question, awaits those who can kick a football—both punters and placekickers.

Very few coaches recruit kickers, unless they have other football skills as well. "We've never had a pure punter on a full scholarship," notes one coach.

He and his fellow coaches rely on the walk-on pool to help fill the need.

The next most likely walk-on to succeed is one who can snap the ball to those who kick it, and do so consistently and accurately.

"If a guy can snap the ball, regardless of his other ability or size, he's worth having around," says another coach. "That's a real knack."

Among those who play every down, the walk-on with the best chance is one who plays a position where experience and technique are not as important.

Such positions, according to most coaches, would be in the defensive line or at running back.

"If a player has some ability and instinct, he can step in more easily at those positions even though he hasn't had as much experience," a coach explains.

Given a reasonable amount of talent,

Many walk-ons make the team as kickers.

how does a walk-on otherwise measure up to his contemporaries?

"Generally, all players are pretty much the same when it comes to learning the system... things like that," a coach feels.

"Sometimes, though, the walk-on will be more intense because he has something to prove—both to himself and to the coaches."

"Besides, there is always the chance of winning a scholarship. That's the real incentive."

Coaches, being only human, admit that a walk-on may sometimes have to do more than another player initially in order to earn attention.

"You like to think you treat every player the same, but, realistically, you don't," a coach admits.

"You're less likely to give immediate attention to a walk-on because you usually have more knowledge about the scholarship player. You have recruited him. You've seen him play, at least on film."

"A walk-on's ability has to jump out at you pretty fast, especially in the fall."

And, strangely enough, sometimes it does. How could an athlete so good go unnoticed until he comes knocking at the door?

"It happens," concedes a coach. "Not often, but it happens."

"There are different reasons. Sometimes a kid develops late. Sometimes people overlook him because they think he's too small or too slow."

"Sometimes he just doesn't get a chance to play for one reason or another. Sometimes he gets lost in the shuffle by transferring from one school to another."

"But the really good player who shows up out of the blue is a real rarity."

Once a walk-on makes the team, where does he rate in relation to a scholarship player? If the two are close in ability, is there an unconscious tendency to favor the one who was recruited?

"We try not to let that affect our judgment," says a coach. "We have enough things to think about as it is. If we think the walk-on is better, we're going to play him and try to get him a scholarship."

But the average walk-on doesn't play that much, if at all. And a scholarship remains a dream.

"We have some kids come out and work hard and get tired and dirty every day... and they know they're probably never going to get a chance to play in a game," notes a coach.

"Sometimes, I ask myself, 'Why?'"

"But they enjoy being part of it, the fellowship and the friendship. They enjoy being part of the game. They come to get a great deal of respect from the other team members. And from me, too."

That's not such a bad thing to have. Even for Walter Mitty.

A NON-TECHNICAL LOOK AT THE TECHNICAL ADVANTAGES OF USING STP GAS TREATMENT

It all starts with this wonderful chemical called Alkylhydroxybenzylpolyamine.

Fancy name for something that looks like a balloon on a string. But, as the primary active ingredient, it does two important things in your car's fuel system:

First, it helps remove water from your gas tank by surrounding droplets of water, suspending them in your gas so they can pass harmlessly through your fuel system.

Second, it helps prevent grunge like gum and varnish from sticking to metal surfaces of the fuel system in two ways: By coating the metal surfaces of the fuel system and by surrounding the gum and varnish to keep them from getting a toehold. This helps keep your carburetor clean and that helps maintain peak engine performance.

Still with us?

So far, all you've got to remember is that STP Gas Treatment fights back against bad guys in your fuel system.

Now for the second thing to remember: All this isn't fiction. It's fact. Results proven in scientific tests. For instance:

FIGHTS RUST.

These two steel bars were both soaked in the same gas plus water. Only difference? The gas used with the bar on the right contained STP Gas Treatment.

FIGHTS WATER.

Water causes more than rust. It can freeze, too. Brrrr! Regular use can lessen the likelihood of gas line freeze. Tests proved STP Gas Treatment increases the emulsification of water and that means it helps water get through your system, out your exhaust.

FIGHTS CARB DEPOSITS.

Some carburetor openings are tiny enough to become restricted by gum and varnish, which can rob your engine of efficiency. We put clean metal sleeves in 28 engine tests. Without us (left) nasty formations developed. With us (right) sleeves came out much cleaner. Take your pick.

FIGHTS VALVE DEPOSITS.

For this test, we matched up six new cars in three matched pairs. After only 12,000 miles, look at the difference that can develop in valve deposit formation. (We're on the right.) That stuff on the left? Would you want that in your car?

In summary.

Maybe you've never thought about using a gas treatment. Well, you should. Odds are, you've got some bad guys lurking in your fuel system. Things you ought to fight back against—if you want to keep your car running like it ought to.

STP Gas Treatment does exactly that.

It's the best selling Gas Treatment in America.

to him. The forward aerial progress was unprecedented and play was halted for the ensuing debate as to the play's legality. A confused referee tossed a coin to see if the play would be allowed and the coin ruled in Yale's favor. P.S.—It was a touchdown pass.

The final two years of his varsity competition coincided with Camp's two years at the Yale Medical School and were perfectly legitimate under the lax athletic regulations of the period. Camp's own logic made him the staunchest supporter of legislation outlawing the use of anyone but undergraduates for varsity sports.

An aggressive organizer and leader, Camp turned his tactical talents to football as soon as he could and by 1878 he became a representative to the Intercollegiate Football Association (IFA) comprising Yale, Harvard, Penn and Princeton. From that year until his death in 1925, Camp sat in every session of football legislatures, intercollegiate conventions and rules committees. His guidelines were largely responsible for the evolution of the game away from rugby "into a contest embodying characteristics of the American competitive spirit."

Between 1880 and 1888 Walter Camp inspired rule changes that had the cumulative effect of remaking football into the modern game. It was Camp who reduced both the playing squads and field dimensions to their present sizes. Camp is credited with the first use of verbal signals and he instituted a scoring scale awarding different points for each of the methods of scoring (1 point safety; 2-touchdown; 4-goal after touchdown; 5-goal from field).

Realizing that mayhem was the order of the day on the scrimmage line, he established the neutral zone between the opposing lines, allowing the referee better officiating conditions for monitoring penalties.

Fan appreciation was always a consideration of Camp's and when spectator complaints about boring 0-0 games became regular, Camp designed the "so many yards in so many downs" requirement. That ingenious new wrinkle prevented a team from just keeping the ball an entire half without ever making a scoring attempt which, if unsuccessful, gave the opposition control of the ball. Teams now had to take risks and devise ever more creative offensive and defensive strategies.

Not all of Camp's innovations were born flawless. The development of close formations gave rise to mass momentum strategies, such as the flying wedge—a formation that put the ball carrier in the middle of a fast moving V of humanity. A player attempting to stop that juggernaut could find himself literally trampled. Camp hadn't foreseen this manipulation of his original idea, and although he was clever enough to use these mass formations to his own advantage (he was Yale's first coach—unpaid), he cried loudly to abolish them, claiming the resultant injuries detracted from the game.

Walter was correct, of course, and soon public sentiment toward football injuries caused the IFA to dissolve and prompted West Point and Annapolis to drop football from their regimens.

In 1906 Camp, Alexander Moffat of Princeton and Captain Palmer E. Pierce, head of the Intercollegiate Athletic Association of America (shortly to become the NCAA), established the Football Rules Committee. Their first job was to abolish the close order mass play. The sane direction of the Rules Committee soon achieved for football the renewed appreciations of the public and the schools and thus, according to one noted football historian, "Walter Camp was not only the sire of American Football, but also a saviour."

Camp's entire life was a demonstration of that kind of zeal and dedication for those things he loved. Abandoning medical school for a career in business (perhaps the rigors of a doctor's life would have kept him from football), Camp rose from salesman to the company's executive director. He was active in civic and charitable affairs and during World War I, served as Chairman of the Athletic Department of the Navy Commission on Training Camp Activities and was also the Physical Director of the Air Service.

Today, alas, Camp is mostly remembered for his All-America team choices. Actually, it isn't known if Camp had a hand in selecting the All-America team in 1889, to which Caspar Whitney can lay claim. If Camp didn't assist Whitney that first year, he quickly assumed that position and by 1897 he was picking them solo.

For the first five years, All-Americans came only from Yale, Harvard and Princeton, except for two Penn men, and it wasn't until 1898 that a "westerner" from Michigan made the team. That was the year Camp commenced picking the All-America team for Collier's, a 28-year relationship that produced the annual "official" mythical eleven.

The association of Camp with All-America teams ended only with his death shortly before his 66th birthday on the night of March 13, 1925. Appropriately, it was during the recess of a Rules Committee Convention.

Tailgating Recipes

Elsewhere in this program you'll find chronicled who's likely to run for daylight, boom field goals and make bone-jarring tackles in today's clash. On this page, however, you'll find a different kind of scouting report, one that will advise you on a sure-fire winning combination—not on the field, you understand, but for your pre-game tailgating ritual.

The R.T. French Company Test Kitchens of Rochester, New York, can guarantee you'll triumph with this recipe for All-American Fried Chicken, and the Campbell Soup Company expects you'll get lots of cheers about their recipe for Halftime Marinated Vegetables.

ALL-AMERICAN FRIED CHICKEN

- 1 envelope (1 1/2-oz.) sloppy joe seasoning mix
- 1/2 cup all-purpose flour
- 1 frying chicken, cut up or 2 to 3 pounds chicken pieces
- 1/4 cup evaporated milk
- Oil

Combine seasoning mix and flour in plastic bag or shallow bowl. Dip chicken in milk, then in seasoning mixture until well coated. Fry in about 1/4-inch hot oil, uncovered, for about 20 minutes, turning occasionally until brown. Cover; cook 20 to 25 minutes. Uncover; cook 10 to 15 minutes longer, until tender and crisp. Chill until served. 4 to 6 servings.

HALFTIME MARINATED VEGETABLES

- 4 large carrots, cut in 1-inch pieces
  - 1 small head cauliflower, broken into flowerets
  - 1 cup sliced celery
  - 1/4 cup green pepper strips
  - 1 small onion, chopped
  - 1 can (6 fl. oz.) vegetable juice (spicy)
  - 1/2 cup salad oil
  - 2 tablespoons vinegar
  - 1 tablespoon brown sugar
  - 1 tablespoon lemon juice
  - 1 teaspoon salt
  - 1/2 teaspoon Worcestershire
- Generous dash pepper

In saucepan, cook carrots and cauliflower in water until just tender, drain. In shallow dish, combine carrots, cauliflower, celery, green pepper and onion. Combine remaining ingredients; pour over vegetables. Chill 12 hours or overnight; stir occasionally. Serve with slotted spoon. Makes about 10 cups.

The 90th Year for OSU

Entering the 90th year since its first class of 45 students met in Stillwater's Congregational Church 16 years before Oklahoma became a state, Oklahoma State University this fall goes into its third year of the administration of President Lawrence L. Boger, who became OSU's 17th president June 15, 1977.

Resident enrollment was 22,003 last year. Students may enroll in OSU's College of Agriculture, Arts and Sciences, Business Administration, Education, Engineering, Home Economics, Veterinary Medicine and the Graduate College.

Salient facts about the great land-grant university at Stillwater include:

There are more than 1,000 full-time-equivalent faculty and the non-academic staff includes more than 400 administrative and professional employees. Teacher-to-student ratio at OSU is 1 to 20. In graduate study the university grants the PhD and EdD degrees in 45 fields, master's in 72 and bachelor's in 84 major fields. There are some 4,100 graduates annually.

O-State's central campus now includes 480 acres with 175 permanent buildings and the physical plant is valued at about $240 million. Adjoining experimental farms cover 2,352 acres and the university's Lake Carl Blackwell area to the west covers 19,364 acres, including the 3,380-acre lake. OSU has 16 agricultural experiment stations around the state.

Campus housing in the 14 major residence halls has a capacity of 6,662 single students in addition to 820 apartments in married student housing. Additional housing is provided just off campus by 24 fraternities and 12 sororities.

Following its earliest athletic endeavors, OSU became a charter member of the Southwest Conference in 1914, resigned to join the Missouri Valley Conference in 1925, then became affiliated with the Big Eight Conference in May, 1957. The Big Eight is composed of only state universities, including Oklahoma State, Iowa State, Nebraska, Missouri, Kansas, Kansas State, Colorado and Oklahoma. Since opening its doors in 1891, OSU has won more NCAA team championships (35) than any school in the United States with the exception of Southern Cal and UCLA.

Cornhusker Wheel Club 1980

Automobile dealers in Nebraska are contributing a large measure of help to the University of Nebraska athletic program through the loan of courtesy cars. Like other programs which are a part of the Cornhusker booster group activities, this project enables the Nebraska Athletic Department to make greater use of its funds. These sports-minded dealers around the state have earned a debt of gratitude from the University of Nebraska Athletic Department. They are an important part of the "team" that includes players, coaches, administration, faculty, staff, students, alumni, Husker Educational Award group, Touchdown Club, Extra Point Club, Beef Club and the courtesy car program.

Room 113 of the Administration Building, the Office of Financial Aids, is a busy location at the beginning of the semester as students seek jobs through the Office's Student Employment Center.

Many UNL students earn while learning

About 2,500 students at UNL meet a portion of their college expenses by working part-time for the University. Hundreds of others work off campus in downtown Lincoln and other areas of the city.

On campus, students work in almost every type of job imaginable, although a high percentage of the jobs available are in the clerical, food service and custodial areas. Working 10-20 hours per week, a student can earn from $1,000 to $2,000 over a two-semester period.

Through the Student Employment Center in the Office of Financial Aids, Room 113 of the Administration Building, students are provided information and placement in jobs located both on and off campus.

The College Work-Study Program provides jobs for many students on campus and in off-campus non-profit organizations. For this program, students must submit a Financial Aid Form to establish eligibility. The Financial Aid Form provides the basis for determining whether a student needs financial assistance, part of which may be in the form of work study jobs. Such jobs allow students to work in the same type of jobs as regular on-campus student employees, with a portion of their wages being paid by the Federal Government.

Copies of the Financial Aid Form are available in the Financial Aids Office, and students interested in the program for the 1981-82 academic year should submit their applications in January.

College Nicknames

It's All in a Name

Ever wonder which nickname is the most popular in college football? Of course you have. The winnah—by a wide margin—is Tigers. There are 26 NCAA football teams with that nickname—ranging from Auburn to Wittenberg.

You probably guessed that one, but can you name No. 2? It's the Bears, 16-15 over the Bulldogs. Then come the Wildcats (12), Eagles (12) and Indians (9).

Twenty-one other nicknames are listed by at least five teams—the Cardinals, Rams and Panthers eight each; Huskies, Pioneers, Raiders and Vikings seven each; Aggies, Bisons, Bobcats, Devils, Lions, Scots and Yellow Jackets six each; and Broncos, Colonels, Crusaders, Dutchmen, Knights, Spartans and Warriors five each.

The funniest or most unusual? That's strictly in the eye of the beholder—if you're a fan of that team it probably isn't either funny or unusual to you. You can do the picking in this category—and answer the irate fan letters.

If you're looking to tune up your voice and diction, though, the P's provide precise practice — Pacers-Paladins-Peacocks-Penguins-Pioneers-Pipers-Pirates - Plainsmen - Poets - Presidents-Profes-Pumas-Purple Aces. Try those at high speed.

How many different nicknames are there among the country's 481 NCAA football teams? That's a good question, and there's no perfect answer. By our system, probably not a bit better than yours, there are 223, counting as one each those with slight variations (Hurricane singular and plural, Wolfpack one word and two and Bison-Bisons). So many different nicknames start with "Fighting," "Golden" and various other colors that we decided to list them under the second part of the name, as in Bears (Golden), Irish (Fighting), Tigers (Blue), Devils (Red), Eagles (Bald) and so on.

But it would never do to list the Ragin' Cajuns of Southwestern Louisiana as the "Cajuns (Ragin')," and the one and only Battling Bishops of Ohio Wesleyan as the "Bishops (Battling)"—would it? Of course not. And in case you're wondering why the Sun Devils of Arizona State aren't listed with the various other Devils, well, the Sun Devils are just too hot (102 in the shade is a cool day there).

Here is a sampling of the nicknames:

PROVEN: 25% SHARPER COLOR PICTURE THAN EVER BEFORE POSSIBLE.

MORE LINES OF RESOLUTION MAKE THE DIFFERENCE.

Lines of resolution determine how sharp your color TV picture will be. The more lines, the sharper the picture. And Magnavox has more lines than ever before possible.

Ordinary color TV pictures have 260 lines. Magnavox Computer Color 330 delivers 330 lines. That's 25% more lines of resolution for Magnavox.

That means Magnavox has a 25% sharper, crisper, clearer color picture.

For documentation of this fact, please write: Magnavox, Dept. 700, Fort Wayne, IN. 46804.
